Generative AI - (Some) discussion points

The Users

Love convenience!

Want New insights at their fingertips

Are influenced by experiences on consumer platforms

Possibilities

- AI is already very useful
 - For small very targeted tasks
 - To overcome scale issues
- AI can generate new insights, very quick and at scale

Concerns

- Things are happening that we don't understand
- What is the learning outcome if AI does everything?
- Fake facts? How do I know it's true?
- Is AI going to replace me?

Considerations

- Academic content is not „free“
- LLM can be extremely costly
- Suitable for academia and education
- Transparency is important to create trust

Project 1 - building a prototype for conversational discovery

Goal

- Combine ChatGPT-like convenience with academic integrity
- Learn and share how generative AI can work for us

Project

- Build a discovery prototype using Large Language Models based on a defined body of content, in cooperation with AI21labs

Requirements and Pre-Requisites

- Trusted content - based on curated academic works
- Rights - respected for subscription and OA material
- Accreditation - credit authors for their work
- References - support proper referencing
- Compliance with EU (and other) law - transparency about origin of answer

How does the setting contribute to the Gothic atmosphere in Emily Brontë's novel "Wuthering Heights"?

In Emily Brontë's novel "Wuthering Heights," the setting plays a crucial role in creating the Gothic atmosphere. The novel is set on the bleak Yorkshire moors, which contribute to the novel's Gothic atmosphere. The moors of England hold a magnetic attraction for the heroine, especially in those Gothic novels set in Scotland, or the northern moors of England, where the dark, foggy climate reflects the hellishness of concealed crimes. Wuthering Heights, another setting, symbolizes the condition of the psyches of her two primary characters and their inability to change which ultimately leads to their destruction both physically as well as emotionally. Emily Brontë's use of nature is essential to this vision. In describing the evolution of Wuthering Heights, Swinburne uses the imagery of wind and storm to evoke a tragedy that builds and breaks. Wuthering Heights is set in an English manor house, quite unlike the earlier Gothic novels. Brontë is able to make the unexpected more eerie in the novel because of her use of familiar locales. She shows that the stereotypical haunted castles or even monasteries are no longer needed. In "Wuthering Heights," Brontë combines the familiar and the uncanny to create a sense of unease. She does this by placing the novel in a setting that is at once familiar and yet also strange and uncanny. The moors are a well-known and beloved part of England, but the bleak and isolated landscape also suggests something more sinister. Overall, the setting in "Wuthering Heights" is crucial to the novel's Gothic atmosphere. Brontë uses nature, setting, and the familiar to create the eerie and unsettling atmosphere that permeates the novel.

what is the main difference between byron's and wordsworth's poetry?

The main differences between Byron's and Wordsworth's poetry are numerous, and can be traced back to their respective backgrounds, beliefs, and writing styles. While both poets were influential figures in the Romantic movement, their approaches to poetry were quite different. Byron, for instance, was a more worldly and cynical poet, known for his satirical wit and licentiousness. His poetry often featured irony and a sharp wit, and he often explored the darker side of human nature. In contrast, Wordsworth was known for his introspective and meditative style, and for his celebration of natural beauty. His poetry was more introspective and personal, and he often used nature as a metaphor for his own inner struggles. Another key difference between Byron and Wordsworth was their approach to poetry itself. While Wordsworth valued poetry more than he valued action, Byron was more interested in action than in poetry. Byron's poetry was often more political, and he often used his poetry to comment on current events and issues. Wordsworth, on the other hand, was more philosophical and introspective, and his poetry focused more on his own experiences and emotions. Finally, Byron and Wordsworth also had different approaches to their subject matter. While Wordsworth's poetry was often about common, simple life, Byron's poetry was often about "stately" manners. Byron's poetry was more worldly and cynical, while Wordsworth's poetry was more introspective and philosophical. Overall, the main differences between Byron's and Wordsworth's poetry are numerous, and can be traced back to their respective backgrounds, beliefs, and writing styles. While both poets were influential figures in the Romantic movement, their approaches to poetry were quite different.

Does the global bees population decline? Can you provide statistics to support the trends?

Yes, there is evidence of a decline in the global bee population. Multiple studies have highlighted the decline in bee populations and the potential causes behind it. One study titled "Global Trends in Bumble Bee Health" discusses the decline in distribution and abundance of bumble bee species. It mentions that habitat loss, changing climate, pathogen transmission, invasion of nonnative species, and pesticides negatively impact bumble bee health. The study emphasizes the importance of expanding research beyond commercially available species to identify causal factors affecting the diversity of wild species. [\[source\]](#)

Another study titled "The Canary in the Coalmine; Bee Declines as an Indicator of Environmental Health" explains that bees are subject to numerous pressures, including the decline in the abundance and diversity of flowers, availability of suitable nest sites, exposure to agrochemicals, and the spread of parasites and pathogens. It suggests that chronic exposure to multiple stressors is driving the decline of honeybees and wild pollinators. The study also highlights that other wild insects, such as butterflies and moths, are also experiencing population declines. [\[source\]](#)

Furthermore, a study titled "The Global Stock of Domesticated Honey Bees Is Growing Slower Than Agricultural Demand for Pollination" analyzes data from the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) and reveals that the global population of managed honey-bee hives has increased approximately 45% in the last half-century. However, the study also highlights a more rapid increase in the fraction of agriculture that depends on animal pollination, which may be stressing global pollination capacity. The study suggests that economic and political factors, rather than biological ones, are driving the increasing demands for agricultural pollination services. [\[source\]](#)

Additionally, a study titled "Pollinator decline - an ecological calamity in the making?" discusses the importance of pollination by insects for global crop production. It highlights the chronic exposure of bees to various stressors, including loss of flowers and suitable habitat, agrochemicals, and parasites. The study also mentions the decline in the biomass of flying insects in
